SEWING CLOTHS

Sewing is the act of using thread to join two or more fragments together. We usually use a needle for this exercise.

The tailor's needle usually have an eye where the thread is passed through and a sharp end. To begin sewing, one would first pass the thread through the eye of the needle and make a knot or tie at the end. The knot or tie actually holds the cloth such that the sewing exercise can begin.

Now one can pierce the materials with the thread and draw up and then pierce again in the counter direction a little distance away from the former point, then draw. The process can be continued to the point where one is okay. Thereafter, another knot or tie is made to lock or keep the threads in the materials.
